I apologize, I had missed one other member voting. This has passed 4-0.

We have been using lpk-execomm@lists.lpky.org for over a decade. The history can be viewed here: <https://lpmail.lp.org/pipermail/lpk-execomm/> [1] ... We used to have that link on the website. Not sure when that changed.

Prior to that we used lpk-execomm@groups.yahoo.com when Yahoo Groups existed.

We apparently lost the history prior to late 2018, which is unfortunate because I had converted all of the old Yahoo stuff to the mailman archive format so we had a complete history.

If we want Motions to go to a specific email list instead of the excom members, we need to put the name of the list in the bylaws.

Gents -

This wasn't published to the list originally. I'm cc'ing it now. Motions must be made to the list per the Constitution, for transparency's sake.

That all said, I'm fine with moving forward to a vote as long as there's no objection. While I personally think we should actually put more into the account, I'm not going to stop us from doing this. We can always add more.

Dr Lodder has made the following motion: "I move that the LPKY Treasurer be authorized and directed to open a Business Money Market Savings Account at the bank for the purpose of holding the party's reserve funds. I further move that the Treasurer be authorized to transfer an initial sum of $15,000 from the general checking account into this money market account, and that the signing authorities for this new account shall be identical to those currently established for the party's checking account."

I'm voting aye.

The current Executive-Caucus Committee Guidebook says "Interest earned on invested funds is not considered a contribution, but is reported as "other receipts," on Schedule 1 of the Election Finance Statement. Offsets to Operating Expenditures." So the general fund and building fund can do it.

However, a State Executive Committee Building Fund must be kept in a separate bank account and reported quarterly instead of semi-annually.

Originally I was thinking of holding back money for possible escheatment, but now that I think about it, it's so easy to transfer money from the money market account back to the checking account that that shouldn't be an issue. So amending the motion to transfer more money makes sense.

I will second.

Question: Are we permitted to do this with current KREF regulations? In the past we were not allowed to put the _general fund_ in an interest-bearing account. I know the building fund was able to do it. But there have been changes over the past decade and I honestly haven't followed all of them.

If we are allowed, I would suggest that we put even more into the account. What's a reasonable maximum "emergency" expenditure? I'm thinking $5K is the most we would ever have to use in any emergency. So putting everything but $5k in there might be good.

SUPPORTING ARGUMENTS (RATIONALE)

Yield Optimization: As of January 2026, market rates for business money market accounts are ranging between 3.30% and 4.10% APY (e.g., U.S. Bank and EverBank). Maintaining all liquid assets in a non-interest-bearing checking account represents an opportunity cost to the party.

Asset Liquidity: Unlike a Certificate of Deposit (CD), a money market account maintains high liquidity, allowing the party to move funds back to the operational checking account nearly instantaneously if an urgent political or legal need arises.

Risk Mitigation: Segregating reserve funds from the primary operational checking account provides an additional layer of security against unauthorized debit transactions or checking fraud on the main account.

Reporting Compliance: The interest earned will be tracked as "Other Receipts" or "Investment Income" for KREF (Kentucky Registry of Election Finance) reporting purposes, ensuring full transparency in accordance with KRS Chapter 121.
